Distributing the best in independent publishing.

Wholesale Catalog

Late Summer/Early Fall 2024

But first, a word...

Hello, everyone!

Welcome to the thickest yet Asterism Books catalog. In case you've somehow missed the earthshaking events of the last few months, let us fill you in. On March 28, 2024, Small Press Distribution (SPD), the longest running distributor for independent presses in the United States shut down abruptly after more than five decades in operation, stranding nearly 400 publishers, most of whom were owed money, all of whom had to find a new home for their books.

We're proud to say that we've taken on more than 100 new publishers since the beginning of March, the vast majority of them former clients of SPD. Our roster now features more than 150 of the best, most innovative, most daring, most wow-would-you-look-at-that small presses from around the world. In addition to the marvelous presses from SPD—like Futurepoem, Hesse Press, Spurl Editions, Wonder, Action Books, and World Poetry, among others—we've also added some other familiar faces, like the legendary McPherson and Company, the inimitable Wave Books (we've got their hardcovers and limited editions in-stock!), the ever-cutting-edge BOMB Magazine, and a bevy of new international publishers like the UK's Peninsula Press, Cipher Press, and Prototype, and Bored Wolves from Poland.

As our Seattle warehouse has rapidly taken in over 80,000 new books in the past several months, seeing the breadth and depth of the collective catalogs of our publishers has been a marvel. And so we wanted to share that with you over the next 130-odd pages, which not only feature new and forthcoming titles, but a brief look at each of our publishers, along with a comprehensive title index at the end. We hope you can find the time to sit down, pen in-hand, and spend some time with it. We guarantee you'll find something you and your customers will love.

We also recently opened up our showroom—a portion of the warehouse with some of every title on bookshelves, ready to browse—for booksellers and librarians. If you're ever in Seattle (or even want to plan a trip!), we're here Monday through Friday for by-appointment browsing.

Our best,
The Asterism Team

Escaping Emily

Alexandra Naughton, David Estringel, Risha Mae Ordas

Emily Wang is spiraling out of control. Lacking a purposeful path, forced to be the family's breadwinner, and coping with her best friend's death, she has a habit of escaping. Escaping Emily is a maelstrom: spiraling in and out of control, under and over authority.

Julie, or Sylvia

Nicole Tallman, Beryl Cooper, Ibrahim Sofiyullaha

When a woman awakens in a London asylum, she isn't sure whether she is dead or alive, how she got there, and what is real. Time is kept by seasons, not hours or minutes. Julie, or Sylvia is a genre-bending collaborative work blending horror, poetry, and literary fiction, with a surreal frame story of bizarre extremes.

Everyone and her Resemblances

Laynie Browne

Everyone and her Resemblances is a poetic sequence in the form of a conversation with an oracular presence—a text to walk a reader through blindness. “Her” is at once: other and icon. These poems are entities you can talk to. Escorts beyond the edges of the permissible, the knowable. This text is a written companion, an excursion into the realm of the ethereal, dream, loss and an exploration of human and inexplicable consciousness.

The Real Ethereal
Katie Naughton

Near the end of her stunning debut, Katie Naughton asks a simple question, not so simple at all: "and what is mine?" The question tunes the ear to the undergirding ethic these poems explore, a frequency that cancels the static of capital's all-too-easy "time is money" to reveal the deeper economy, one that knows the real, letter by letter, is embedded within the ethereal, with an E as the only excess.

Hope and Wild Panic

Sean Ennis

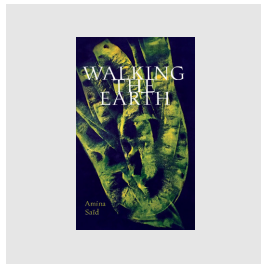

With no real plot to speak of, and an amorphous form, Hope and Wild Panic is a book that defies categorization and concise, catchy jacket copy. It's a collection of microfictions, or it's a novel-in-stories, or it's something else. Neither. Both. Doesn't matter. It's about a guy who is forever out of place in his adopted town, even if he's a regular at the Piggly Wiggly. It's about a guy who really loves his wife.

Singed

Daniela Cascella

Daniela Cascella’s Singed: Muted voice-transmissions, after the fire starts not with creation, but destruction – a library ravaged by fire. What of the singed debris can be salvaged? Which of the disfigured inkblots deciphered? How much will be remembered? Re-written, re-invented, re-imagined? Singed, only to sing again?

Ex Ophidia Press

The mission of the press is to publish English language poetry that explores new territories of the imagination by using the traditional techniques of poetry: rhythm an melody, imagery and metaphor, irony and insight, apt language for important ideas. While we do not oppose any form of poetic expression, we prefer poetry that is formally conservative yet socially progressive: the iron behind the velvet.

Books are not places apart from this world. They are impossible places within it. We do not read to be transported to places that do not exist, but to access places in our lived experience that had not been visible or registered without the incantation of the text. Consequently, writing is not the shaping of the imagined, but the arrangement of the existing, its reencoding for fresh discovery by the reader.
